1 I. INTRODUCTION

2 After failing to persuade the American people and their representatives to pass radical 3 immigration legislation, Defendants now attempt to implement that same policy by executive fiat.
 4 Defendants' Regulation substantially redefines the term "public charge," which has been 5 construed consistently by courts and administrative agencies since 1882. Defendants deny the 6 enormity of this change, but their cited authorities fail to refute the Regulation's clear departure 7 from over a century of consistent interpretation. Indeed, Defendants fail entirely to engage with 8 the anomalous result of their construction: fully one half of U.S.-born citizens would qualify as 9 likely public charges under the Regulation, a clear indication that the Regulation is not reasonable.
 10 In addition, the Regulation is independently arbitrary and capricious because Defendants have 11 failed to adequately respond to comments or justify their chosen methodology, and the head of the 12 implementing agency was not validly appointed. Defendants' contrary arguments are unavailing.
 13 Because Plaintiffs have shown a likelihood of success on the merits, and because the other 14 preliminary injunction factors also weigh in their favor, the Court should enjoin the Regulation.

15 II. PLAINTIFFS SATISFY JURISDICTIONAL AND PRUDENTIAL STANDING

16 A. Plaintiffs have Article III Standing

17 Plaintiffs have organizational standing because the Regulation frustrates their missions, 18 diverts their resources, and reduces their funding.¹ See Havens Realty Corp. v. Coleman, 455 U.S.
 19 363, 378–79 & n.19 (1982) (organizational standing where defendant's racial steering frustrated 20 plaintiffs' equal housing mission and caused it "to devote significant resources to identify and 21 counteract" those practices). The Ninth Circuit has consistently held such allegations establish 22 standing under Havens. E.g., Valle del Sol Inc. v. Whiting, 732 F.3d 1006, 1018 (9th Cir. 2013) 23 (organizational standing based on frustration of mission and diversion of resources "to educating 24 their members about the law"); Fair Housing Council of San Fernando Valley v. Roommate.com,

25
 26 ¹ Plaintiff California Primary Care Association ("CPCA") has brought suit in its representational 27 capacity, as alleged in the Complaint, ¶ 16, and supported in its declaration, ECF No. 35-3, 28 Castellano-García Decl., and meets the standard for associational standing under Fleck & Assocs., Inc. v. City of Phoenix, 471 F.3d 1100, 1105–06 (9th Cir. 2006).

1 LLC, 666 F.3d 1216, 1219 (9th Cir. 2012) (organizational standing where defendant’s conduct 2 “frustrated their central mission” so they “divert[ed] resources independent of litigation costs” 3 through “education and outreach campaigns”). Indeed, in East Bay Sanctuary v. Trump, 932 F.3d 4 742, 765–66 (9th Cir. 2018), the Court held legal services organizations (specifically including 5 Plaintiff Central American Resource Center (“CARECEN”)), had standing to challenge an 6 immigration rule that frustrated their missions to provide legal services, caused them to divert 7 resources to training and educating, and reduced their funding.

8 The Regulation frustrates the legal and civic organizational Plaintiffs’² missions to provide 9 immigration relief and access to public benefits because the Regulation hinders their clients’ 10 ability to obtain immigration relief and/or public benefits. Kassa Decl. ¶¶ 10–13, 16; Ayloush 11 Decl. ¶¶ 11–14; Sharp Decl. ¶¶ 12–15, 18; Goldstein Decl. ¶ 8; Seon Decl. ¶¶ 10–14; Nakamura
 12 Decl. ¶¶ 12, 14–15; Kersey Decl. ¶¶ 29–30.³ This decreases funding tied to the number of cases 13 or benefit applications Plaintiffs file, and makes existing funding less effective due to increased 14 operating costs. Kassa Decl. ¶¶ 10–17; Ayloush Decl. ¶¶ 11–16, 18–19; Sharp Decl. ¶¶ 12–16, 15 20–21; Goldstein Decl. ¶¶ 7–12; Seon Decl. ¶¶ 10–14, 16–21, 23; Nakamura Decl. ¶¶ 13–17; 16 Kersey Decl. ¶¶ 26–30, 34–36. Plaintiffs have shifted resources from other services to address 17 harms and community demand regarding the Regulation. E.g., Seon Decl. ¶ 16 (shift from 18 domestic violence services); Kersey Decl. ¶ 26 (shift from benefit enrollment); Goldstein Decl.
 19 ¶¶ 8–11 (shift from previously spending “virtually no time” on public charge to diverting 20 resources from work on agricultural trends and H2A program); Nakamura Decl. ¶¶ 13–14 (shift 21 from public benefits assistance); Kassa Decl. ¶¶ 15, 17–18 (shift from census participation and 22 other initiatives).

 26 ² African Communities Together (“ACT”), Council on American Islamic Relations-California (“CAIR-CA”), CARECEN, Farmworker Justice (“FJ”), Korean Resource Center (“KRC”), Legal Aid Society of San Mateo County (“Legal Aid”), and Maternal and Child Health Access (“MCHA”).

27 ³ Contrary to Defendants’ arguments, the Ninth Circuit has repeatedly recognized the sufficiency 28 of sworn declarations. E.g., Valle del Sol, 732 F.3d at 1018; Comite de Jornaleros de Redondo Beach v. City of Redondo Beach, 657 F.3d 936, 943 (9th Cir. 2011) (en banc).

1 The Regulation also has harmed Plaintiff CPCA’s members, including Plaintiff La Clínica
 2 and AHS, by frustrating their missions to provide quality health care to low-income, immigrant 3 communities because the number of patients seeking medical services and enrolling in Medi-Cal 4 (California’s Medicaid), from which they obtain the majority of their funding, have decreased.
 5 Castellano-García Decl. ¶¶ 5, 7, 16–22 (estimating members’ annual Medi-Cal reimbursement loss 6 of $46 to $138 million); García Decl. ¶¶ 3, 8–9, 11–13, 14–16, 18 (noting reduced funding may 7 lead to layoffs); Quach Decl. ¶¶ 4, 16–19, 20–24 (estimating annual Medi-Cal reimbursement loss 8 of $5.2 million). “For standing purposes, a loss of even a small amount of money is ordinarily an 9 injury.” East Bay, 932 F.3d at 767 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Defendants 10 argue these injuries are “speculative,” but their own regulatory analysis acknowledges expected 11 Medicaid disenrollment. E.g., Kolsky Decl. Ex. A (hereafter “RIA”) at 90–101, Tables 16, 19; 84 12 Fed. Reg. 41,292, 41,300. Funding shortages, fewer patients, and diversion of resources will 13 impair Plaintiffs’ ability to provide quality health care to their communities. García Decl. ¶¶ 13, 14 16, 18, 21; Quach Decl. ¶¶ 26–29. As a result, Plaintiffs have standing.

15 B. Plaintiffs’ Claims Are Ripe

16 Plaintiffs’ claims are ripe under Article III for the same reasons that they have standing.
 17 See Clark v. City of Seattle, 899 F.3d 802, 809 (9th Cir. 2018); Susan B. Anthony List v. Driehaus, 18 573 U.S. 149, 167–68 (2014). They also are prudentially ripe under Cottonwood Environmental 19 Law Center v. U.S. Forest Service, 789 F.3d 1075, 1083 (9th Cir. 2015). First, delayed review 20 would cause hardship to Plaintiffs because they already face frustrations of their missions, 21 diversions of resources, and reductions in funding. Second, the Regulation is the agency’s final 22 action, so judicial intervention does not inappropriately interfere with further administrative 23 action. Third, Defendants do not identify any factual development necessary for the Court to 24 review the legal issues. Lujan v. Nat’l Wildlife Fed., 497 U.S. 871, 891 (1990) (“[A] substantive 25 rule which as a practical matter requires the plaintiff to adjust his conduct immediately . . . is ‘ripe’ 26 for review at once”); Bennett v. Spear, 520 U.S. 154, 177–78 (1997) (final agency action 27 “mark[s] the ‘consummation’ of the agency’s decisionmaking process”).

28

1 C. Plaintiffs Are in the Zone of Interests

2 To bring a statutory claim, a plaintiff must be “within the zone of interests protected by the 3 law invoked,” Lexmark Int’l, Inc. v. Static Control Components, Inc., 572 U.S. 118, 127–29 4 (2014) (citation omitted), which means the plaintiff’s interests cannot be “so marginally related to 5 or inconsistent with the purposes implicit in the statute that it cannot reasonably be assumed that 6 Congress intended to permit the suit.” Clarke v. Secs. Indus. Ass’n, 479 U.S. 388, 399 (1987).

7 Here, Plaintiffs’ interests in serving low-income, immigrant communities by providing 8 medical or legal services and advice as well as access to public benefits are both related to and 9 consistent with the purposes of the Regulation’s underlying statute to provide procedures and 10 policies for immigration relief. See East Bay, 932 F.3d at 768–69; 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(4)(B); 8 11 C.F.R. § 212.21(a)–(b). Indeed, the Regulation and RIA count health care providers and non-12 profit organizations among those who will be affected by the Regulation. E.g., 84 Fed. Reg. at 13 41,301; RIA at 3–7, Table 11 at 36-37, 101–10 (describing costs to “immigration lawyers, 14 immigration advocacy groups, health care providers of all types, non-profit organizations,” and 15 “reduced revenues for healthcare providers participating in Medicaid”). Defendants’ argument 16 that only “aliens improperly determined inadmissible” are in the zone of interests, Opp. 10, is 17 contrary to East Bay’s holding that plaintiffs like those here are within the statute’s zone of 18 interests. 932 F.3d at 768–69 & n.10. Plaintiffs have shown that they “are, at the least, arguably 19 within the zone of interests” here. Id. at 769 (citation omitted); see also Lexmark, 572 U.S. at 130 20 (noting test “is not ‘especially demanding’” and “the benefit of any doubt goes to the plaintiff”).

21 III. PLAINTIFFS ARE LIKELY TO SUCCEED ON THE MERITS

22 A. The Regulation Is Inconsistent with the Meaning of “Public Charge”

23 Defendants contend that the Regulation’s definition of “public charge,” one which 24 radically departs from any prior administrative or judicial interpretation, is supported by its plain 25 meaning and by case law. Defendants fail entirely, however, to contend with the breadth of their 26 Regulation, which on its face adopts a definition of public charge so broad—and so 27 unreasonable—that, if applied to U.S.-born citizens, would cover roughly half of them. And,
 28 Defendants’ own chosen dictionary definitions, cases, and prior agency interpretations provide no

1 support for their sweeping change. Defendants ultimately fall back on their purported rulemaking 2 authority, but that authority, even assuming it exists, is beside the point; the question is whether 3 Defendants' interpretation of Section 1182 is consistent with the statute. Because it is not, the 4 Regulation is invalid.

5 Defendants' opposition sidesteps the absurd results to which their radical new 6 interpretation inexorably leads. Although Defendants claim the proposed change "better reflect[s] 7 Congress's legislated policy," Opp. 2, the Regulation will label as "likely to become a public 8 charge" vast numbers of individuals who do not meet the common understanding of that term.
 9 Mot. 8, 16–17. Defendants all but ignore this, neither disputing Plaintiffs' expert's numbers nor 10 attempting to defend their own approach.⁴ Indeed, nowhere do Defendants explain how such a 11 definition could possibly be consistent with the statute's text, purpose, and history.

12 Defendants' cited dictionary definitions in fact confirm that their interpretation of "public 13 charge" is unreasonable. As noted in the Motion, contemporary definitions of "charge" referred to 14 a person "committed or intrusted [sic] ... to the care, custody, or management of another." Mot. 9 15 (quoting nineteenth century dictionary definitions of charge). Defendants do not address those 16 definitions, but quote different dictionaries of the same era. Their only definition of "charge" that 17 actually refers to a person—"a pauper being chargeable to the parish or town"—is entirely 18 consistent with the definitions offered by Plaintiffs. See Opp. 11 (quoting Stewart Rapalje et al., 19 Dict. of Am. and English Law (1888)). Thus, Defendants' own source material confirms that 20 "public charge" referred in 1882 to a person primarily dependent on the public—in this case a 21 parish or town—to avoid destitution or extreme poverty.⁵

 24 ⁴ Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' data does not account for the 12/36 standard, Opp. 28 n.23, 25 but Defendants do not dispute that an official has no practical means of predicting whether a 26 noncitizen will use more or less than 12 months of benefits. See Trisi Decl. ¶ 31.

27 28 ⁵ Definitions of public charge at the time Congress passed IIRIRA in 1996 likewise point to individuals unable to care for themselves and therefore primarily dependent on the public. See Opp. 11 n.8 (citing Black's Law Dictionary definition of "a person whom it is necessary to support at public expense by reason of poverty alone or illness and poverty," and Webster's Third New Int'l Dict. (1986), definition of "a person or thing committed or entrusted to the care, custody, management, or support of another"); see Mot. 14–15; 1999 NPRM, 64 Fed. Reg. 28,676

1 Defendants argue that “public charge” is not synonymous with “pauper,” Opp. 12, but that 2 is not Plaintiffs’ contention.⁶ Instead, Plaintiffs’ point is that the term “public charge” “gathers 3 meaning from the words around it” and should be given “a precise and narrow application” 4 because “a word is known by the company it keeps,” and such an approach “avoid[s] the giving of 5 unintended breadth to Acts of Congress.” Jarecki v. G. D. Searle & Co., 367 U.S. 303, 307
 6 (1961); see 2A Shambie Singer, Sutherland Statutory Construction § 47:16 (7th ed. 2018) (noting 7 that “the coupling of words denotes an intention that they should be understood in the same 8 general sense”). Thus, the term “public charge” gained its more “precise content,” *United States
 9 v. Williams*, 553 U.S. 285, 294 (2008), by its grouping in the early immigration statutes with terms 10 that refer to individuals who, due to mental, physical, or other incapacity, are incapable of 11 supporting themselves absent primary support from the public.

12 In an effort to combat this straightforward statutory construction, Defendants claim that 13 Congress in 1917 moved the public charge provision to disassociate “public charge” from the 14 statutory terms discussed above. This argument is wrong twice over. First, Defendants claim that 15 the 1917 statute itself contains a note that it meant to override the Supreme Court’s decision in 16 Gegiow v. Uhl, 239 U.S. 3 (1915), which held that “public charge” should be construed as similar 17 to the terms around it. Opp. 14–15. But in fact that footnote is from a compilation by the 18 Department of Labor commenting on the statute. Compare 1917 Act, ch. 29, § 3, 39 Stat. 874 (no 19 footnote) with Robe Carl White, Immigration Laws and Rules of January 1, 1930 25 n.5 (1935).
 20 The statute thus did not indicate any intention to override Gegiow.

21 Second, multiple courts rejected this very argument shortly after the 1917 Act was passed 22 and instead followed the same canon that Plaintiffs advance. See Ex parte Hosaye Sakaguchi, 277
 23 F. 913, 916 (9th Cir. 1922) (“Although in the act of February 5, 1917, under which the present 24 case is to be determined, the location of the words persons likely to become a public charge is

 26 (providing additional definitions that “unambiguously” apply to a person that likewise require dependence on the public for “care [or] custody”).

27 28 ⁶ As noted above, however, Defendants themselves rely on a definition of public charge that equates the term with pauper, see p. 5, supra; Opp. 11.

1 changed . . . this change of location of the words does not change the meaning that should be 2 given them, and that it is still to be held that a person likely to become a public charge is one who,
 3 by reason of poverty, insanity, or disease or disability, will probably become a charge on the 4 public.” (citation omitted)); Ex parte Mitchell, 256 F. 229, 230 (N.D.N.Y. 1919) (“I am unable to 5 see that this change of location of these words in the act changes the meaning that is to be given 6 them. A person likely to become a public charge is one who for some cause or reason appears to 7 be about to become a charge on the public, one who is to be supported at public expense, by 8 reason of poverty, insanity and poverty, disease and poverty, idiocy and poverty, or, it might be, 9 by reason of having committed a crime which, on conviction, would be followed by 10 imprisonment.” (citation omitted)). Defendants do not acknowledge these precedents.⁷

11 As the Motion noted, immigration cases consistently construed the term “public charge” as 12 requiring primary dependence on the public to avoid destitution, and cases outside the 13 immigration context had drawn the same line. Mot. 10–12. Defendants misconstrue these and 14 other cases to claim that they stand for the proposition that any assistance rendered an immigrant a 15 public charge.⁸ Opp. 13. Not so. In Lam Fung Yen v. Frick, 233 F. 393, 396–97 (6th Cir. 1916), 16 the court found that the immigrant was not a public charge on the grounds of never having had a 17 job, but instead was likely to become a public charge because he was a habitual gambler likely to 18

19 ⁷ At a minimum, the history of the later-enacted 1990 Act makes clear that the non-public-charge 20 exclusions, such as “pauper” and “professional beggar,” were ultimately removed because of their 21 similarity to “public charge.” Mot. 11 n.3. This later congressional action makes clear that Congress believed those terms should be construed together.

22 ⁸ Defendants claim that state cases cited by Plaintiffs interpret only “state law” and “have no bearing on the interpretation of the public charge ground of inadmissibility,” Opp. 13, 15 n.13.
 23 The government thus largely fails to engage with the cases Plaintiffs cited in their opening brief that equate public charge with destitution. See Mot. 12–13 & nn.4–7. Defendants nonetheless 24 rely on state law themselves, but that authority is inapposite. In Inhabitants of Guilford v.
Inhabitants of Abbott, 17 Me. 335, 335 (1840), Defendants omit that the person at issue was a 25 “pauper” who had previously been confined due to insanity and was “roving in great destitution in several neighboring towns.” In Town of Hartford v. Town of Hartland, 19 Vt. 392, 397 (1847), 26 the woman and children found to be public charges were “paupers,” and, contrary to Defendants’ characterization, they were found not entitled to the $12 per year in rental income. After 27 evaluating “the degree of her destitution and poverty,” the court determined that the woman’s complete lack of income made her a public charge. Id. These cases thus support Plaintiffs’ 28 interpretation of public charge.

1 be incarcerated. In re Feinknopf, 47 F. 447, 447–48 (E.D.N.Y. 1891), dealt with the level of 2 evidence on which an immigration officer must rely to make a public charge determination, but 3 provided no standard. Defendants rely on United States v. Lipkis, 56 F. 427, 427–28 (S.D.N.Y.
 4 1893), which found that long-term institutionalization renders an immigrant a public charge—a 5 position on which both parties agree. Defendants cannot cite a single federal case to support their 6 chosen interpretation of “public charge.” Meanwhile, Hosaye Sakaguchi and Mitchell, along with 7 the cases cited in Plaintiffs’ opening brief, support the longstanding definition.

8 Defendants also downplay and ignore longstanding administrative interpretations of the 9 public charge statute. Defendants do not dispute, nor could they, that the BIA acknowledged in 10 Matter of Harutunian, 14 I. & N. Dec. 583, 586 (BIA 1974), the distinction between those benefits 11 on which an individual was primarily dependent and “supplementary benefits” provided by the 12 government. Harutunian specifically noted that the term public charge entailed the individual 13 being “destitute.” Id.; see also Matter of Perez, 15 I. & N. Dec. 136, 137 (BIA 1974) (rejecting 14 receipt of benefits as establishing the immigrant was a public charge).

15 And Defendants entirely disregard the 1999 NPRM’s determination that benefits like 16 SNAP, Medicaid, and Section 8 vouchers should not be included in the public charge analysis 17 because they are among “[c]ertain Federal, State, and local benefits [that] are increasingly being 18 made available to families with incomes far above the poverty level, reflecting broad public policy 19 decisions about improving general health and nutrition, promoting education, and assisting 20 working-poor families.” 64 Fed. Reg. at 28,678. The INS previously recognized that mere receipt 21 of these benefits is not an indication of destitution, but was instead a consequence of decisions by 22 legislatures across the country—including Congress—to provide certain benefits to those who are 23 not in fact destitute. By contrast, Defendants deny that such a public policy choice was made.

24 They instead claim, entirely without support, that those who receive supplemental benefits 25 are equivalent to previous “occupants of almshouses,” the only difference being that the 26 government has “deinstitutionalized the poor” and “revised public services in a way that negates 27 the former distinctions among types of public support provided to individuals needing different 28 amounts of aid.” Opp. 12 n.10, 17. This contention is belied by the facts that gave rise to the

1 1882 Act. There, the Act excluded individuals who were public charges, but also imposed on each 2 noncitizen who entered the United States a 50-cent head tax for the purpose of creating an 3 “immigrant fund,” An Act to Regulate Immigration, ch. 376, § 1, 22 Stat. 214 (1882), in part to 4 provide “relief of such [immigrants] as are in distress.” Id.; see also Head Money Cases, 112 U.S.
 5 580, 590–91 (1884) (describing the purposes of the fund). As such, small amounts of aid, under 6 the 1882 statute, did not render immigrants “public charges.” And, “the specific context in which 7 . . . language is used” demonstrates that “public charge” cannot encompass benefits that provide 8 relief, but—unlike providing support to occupants of almshouses, asylums, or prisons in 1882—
 9 are not indicative of destitution. Util. Air Regulatory Grp. v. EPA, 573 U.S. 302, 321 (2014) 10 (noting that “reasonable statutory interpretation” must include such context).

11 Against this backdrop of consistent judicial and administrative interpretation, Congress 12 repeatedly reenacted the public charge provision and rejected changes to the statute that would 13 have adopted a definition similar to the one advanced in the Regulation. See Mot. 14–16.
 14 Defendants contend that this lack of action evidences a desire by Congress to delegate to DHS the 15 definition of public charge. Opp. 19. To the contrary, repeated congressional reenactment of the 16 public charge provision and rejection of changes reflects congressional approval of judicial and 17 administrative interpretation. See Mot. 14–16. In any event, even if Defendants were correct, 18 Congress could delegate to DHS the power only to adopt reasonable interpretations of the statute, 19 Chevron, U.S.A., Inc. v. NRDC, 467 U.S. 837, 844 (1984), and the text, structure, and history of 20 Section 1182 all make clear that Defendants’ interpretation is not reasonable.

21 B. The Regulation Is Arbitrary and Capricious

22 Defendant’s Opposition fails to justify the arbitrary and capricious Regulation.

23 Chilling Effect and Costs: Defendants’ opposition, like the Regulation itself, fails to 24 grapple with the extensive evidence provided in comments addressing the harms and costs.
 25 Defendants misconstrue Plaintiffs’ argument as focusing on the quantity of comments opposing 26 the rule, Opp. 20; instead, Plaintiffs’ argument is that Defendants have not addressed or responded 27 to substantial evidence in the comments regarding the Regulation’s chilling effect. That failure 28

1 renders the Regulation arbitrary and capricious. See Fred Meyer Stores, Inc. v. NLRB, 865 F.3d
 2 630, 638 (D.C. Cir. 2017); Genuine Parts Co. v. EPA, 890 F.3d 304, 311–12 (D.C. Cir. 2018).

3 Defendants first contend that they did in fact adequately consider the chilling effect. Opp.
 4 20–21. Although Defendants acknowledged its existence, 84 Fed. Reg. at 41,312, they simply 5 dismissed it because “it is difficult to predict the rule’s disenrollment impacts with respect to the 6 regulated population,” and “with respect to people who are not regulated by this rule.” Id.
 7 Defendants contend, based on Consumer Electronics Association v. FCC, 347 F.3d 291, 303 (D.C.
 8 Cir. 2003)), that merely noting that forecasting is difficult is sufficient. Opp. 21. But in 9 Consumer Electronics, the agency did not refuse to take into account projections based on 10 uncertainty; instead, the FCC picked among three general categories of commenters’ forecasts.
 11 347 F.3d at 303. Here, Defendants dismissed all the studies wholesale.⁹ Such lack of 12 consideration was not sufficient. See Int’l Ladies’ Garment Workers’ Union v. Donovan, 722 F.2d 13 795, 821–22 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (vacating agency action that did not “give sufficient consideration to 14 factors that may be highly relevant” and rejecting agency’s reliance on “predictive nature of the 15 judgment”); Fred Meyer Stores, Inc., 865 F.3d at 638 (agency must “reflect upon the information 16 contained in the record and grapple with contrary evidence”). Indeed, DHS provided its own 17 estimates for chilling effect in its Final Regulatory Impact Analysis. RIA at 89–101 & Table 20 18 (calculating potential benefit disenrollment at three different levels).¹⁰ DHS cannot reasonably 19 claim both that it is too difficult to estimate a chilling effect and simultaneously conduct a cost-20 benefit analysis that estimates a chilling effect.

21
 22

23 ⁹ Defendants’ citation (at 24) to SIFMA v. CFTC, 67 F. Supp. 3d 373, 432 (D.D.C. 2014), is no 24 more persuasive. SIFMA did not involve a defendant agency disregarding empirical studies in 25 comments, but rather involved a claim that the agency reached a determination for an issue on a 26 record devoid of data. Id. That same case makes clear exactly what an agency should do where, 27 as here, data is available: “The agency’s job is to exercise its expertise to make tough choices 28 about which of the competing estimates is most plausible, and to hazard a guess as to which is correct, even if the lack of [data] means that estimate will be imprecise.” Id. (quoting Pub. Citizen v. Fed. Motor Carrier Safety Admin., 374 F.3d 1209, 1221 (D.C. Cir. 2004)).

¹⁰ The Regulation violates the APA not because the RIA was flawed, see Opp. 21, but because it shows that Defendants did conduct the chilling effect analysis they claim they could not.

1 Crucially, Plaintiffs do not merely disagree with Defendants’ “weighing of the costs and 2 benefits,” Opp. 21; Plaintiffs instead claim that Defendants impermissibly dismissed evidence 3 submitted by multiple commenters as to the chilling effects of the Regulation by deeming the 4 “rule’s overriding consideration” to be self-sufficiency, and finding that consideration alone to be 5 “a sufficient basis to move [the Regulation] forward.” 84 Fed. Reg. at 41,312. This one concern 6 trumped all others and prevented Defendants from engaging in reasoned decisionmaking.

7 Defendants similarly claim they grappled with other costs and public health effects, Opp.
 8 23–24, but the same myopic focus on self-sufficiency stopped Defendants from grappling with, for 9 example, “worse health outcomes,” “increased prevalence of communicable diseases,” “increased 10 rates of poverty and housing instability,” and “reduced productivity and educational attainment.” 11 RIA at 109. The Regulation similarly gave inadequate consideration to the costs to hospitals and 12 other medical providers, dismissing them as “administrative” and “familiarization costs,” 84 Fed.
 13 Reg. at 41,475, while once again justifying them due to self-sufficiency. Defendants suggest that 14 they were unable to quantify these costs because they were “immeasurable,” Opp. 23–24, but fail 15 to explain why the estimates from studies provided in the comments were insufficient to do so.

16 See Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. Zinke, 900 F.3d 1053, 1068–70 (9th Cir. 2018).¹¹

17 Finally, Defendants claim that they sufficiently engaged with the myriad comments 18 detailing the negative effects and their costs to the health and well-being of individuals, families, 19 and the nation. Opp. 23–24. In the Regulation, Defendants make the conclusory assertion that 20 they “believe[] that it will ultimately strengthen public safety, health, and nutrition through this 21 rule by denying admission or adjustment of status to [individuals] who are not likely to be self-22 sufficient.” 84 Fed. Reg. at 41,314. But Defendants provide no evidence for how or why this 23 belief is justified. Defendants were required to explain why their purported benefits outweigh the 24 harms and justify the policy choice made. McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. U.S. Dep’t of the Air 25 Force, 375 F.3d 1182, 1187 (D.C. Cir. 2004) (courts “do not defer to the agency’s conclusory or

26
 27 ¹¹ While Defendants are correct that the statute in Zinke created additional data requirements, Opp.
 28 25 n.22, the Court applied the APA’s standard for adequate explanation—a standard Defendants cannot here meet.

1 unsupported suppositions") (citing Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Ass'n of U.S. v. State Farm, 463
 2 U.S. 29, 44 (1983)). They failed to do so.

3 Inconsistency: In response to Plaintiffs' contention that Defendants can evaluate as a 4 heavily weighted negative factor Medicaid use by pregnant women or children against them in the 5 public charge determination, Defendants assert for the first time in their opposition that Medicaid 6 benefits can constitute "financial resources" to be considered in the public charge determination.
 7 Opp. 26. This is inconsistent with the Regulation, which does not identify Medicaid as an asset, 8 resource, or financial status factor that can be considered when determining whether an individual 9 has sufficient household assets or resources to cover foreseeable medical costs, despite explicitly 10 including private health insurance as an independent means of overcoming the heavily weighted 11 negative factor. 84 Fed. Reg. at 41,412. In fact, Defendants responded to a commenter asking 12 them to eliminate this heavily weighted factor by stating that "DHS will retain the heavily 13 weighted negative factor [for an individual diagnosed with a serious medical condition] based on 14 the applicant's lack of financial means to pay for reasonably foreseeable medical costs if the 15 [individual] does not have private health insurance." Id. at 41,445 (emphasis added). The 16 Regulation's treatment of financial resources simply cannot be reconciled with Defendants' 17 litigating position. See SEC v. Chenery Corp., 318 U.S. 80 (1943).

18 Defendants' attempt to justify their arbitrary distinction between the use of Medicaid (not 19 considered) and SNAP (considered) by children and pregnant women fares no better. Although 20 Defendants point to differences between the Medicaid and SNAP statutes, they do not dispute that 21 the sponsor, and not the public, would be responsible for the costs of SNAP benefits used by 22 children and pregnant women. Opp. 26. This concession exposes the bankruptcy of Defendants' 23 position. Throughout the Regulation, Defendants sidestep the substantial harms identified by 24 commenters and resort to the principal that individuals should rely on themselves or the "financial 25 resources of the family, [and their] sponsors." 84 Fed. Reg. at 41,486. They nonetheless did not 26 exempt use of SNAP by children and pregnant women even though SNAP sponsors are 27 responsible for the financial costs associated with those benefits. Defendants have no answer for 28

1 this inconsistent treatment of SNAP, which they concede does not serve the goals of the 2 Regulation.

3 Calculation of Benefits Usage: The conclusions of the “multiple studies” Defendants rely 4 on do not support the Defendants’ “12/36 Standard.” Under this standard, if an individual is 5 receiving more than one benefit in a given month, that individual could easily run afoul of that 6 factor in as few as four months. Mot. 25. To justify their assertion that the 12/36 standard had 7 predictive value Defendants relied heavily on two studies: the “Census Bureau’s Dynamics of 8 Economic Well-being study” and the “welfare leaver study.” 84 Fed. Reg. at 41,360. But neither 9 study examines whether concurrent use of benefits over a short duration has any correlation to the 10 length of time a person uses benefits.¹² As such, Defendants have failed to provide “adequate 11 explanation and support for its determinations.” Zinke, 900 F.3d at 1068–69 (failure to explain its 12 reliance on a specific studies given other relevant evidence was arbitrary and capricious) (citation 13 omitted).

14 Defendant Cuccinelli’s unlawful appointment: Defendants do not dispute that 15 Defendant Cuccinelli’s appointment was based in part on the Administration’s desire to 16 promulgate the Regulation, and that he was significantly involved in the Regulation’s 17 promulgation, publicity, and implementation. Mot. 25–26 & n.13.¹³ Nor do they dispute that the 18 appointment was unprecedented. Defendants’ only substantive response is that Cuccinelli’s 19 appointment does not violate the FVRA’s remedial provision, 5 U.S.C. § 3348(d). Opp. 29. The 20 APA, however, provides a remedy independent from Section § 3348(d). Southwest General, Inc.
 21 v. NLRB, 796 F.3d 67 (D.C. Cir. 2015), aff’d, 137 S. Ct. 929 (2017). In Southwest General, the 22

23 ¹² The census study examined the behaviors of people enrolled in “one or more major assistance 24 programs” without disaggregating participants in one benefit from those enrolled in multiple 25 benefits, while the “welfare leaver” study was limited to recipients of cash assistance, which were 26 already considered in the public charge analysis prior to the Regulation. 84 Fed. Reg. at 41,360.

27 ¹³ Defendants do not provide substantive responses to Plaintiffs’ claims as to the illegality and 28 procedural irregularity of Defendant Cuccinelli’s appointment, simply noting instead that they 29 “disagree” with Plaintiffs’ arguments. See Opp. 29 n.4. Defendants’ response likewise ignores 30 Defendant Cuccinelli’s statutory duties to both “establish national immigration services policies 31 and priorities,” 6 U.S.C. § 271(a)(3)(D), and to “establish the policies for performing” immigrant 32 visa petitions, id. § 271(a)(3)(A), (b).

1 D.C. Circuit found that because an officer who was invalidly appointed under 5 U.S.C. § 3345 was 2 involved in an agency adjudication, that adjudication was invalid under the APA. 796 F.3d at 78– 3 81. That was true notwithstanding the fact that Section 3348—the remedial provision on which 4 the government relies here—did not apply to the officer under the statute. Id. at 78. That is, the 5 D.C. Circuit concluded that so long as an officer who was invalidly appointed subject to Section 6 3345 was involved in an agency action, that action violates the APA, independent of whether or 7 not it separately violates the remedial provision of the FVRA. The government’s reliance on 8 Section 3348 is thus inapposite. As in Southwest General, Plaintiffs assert that Defendant 9 Cuccinelli was unlawfully appointed under Section 3345 and was involved in issuing the 10 regulation. The Regulation was issued “not in accordance with law” under 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A).
 11 Mot. 26 (citing both APA and FVRA for vacatur of Regulation). Vacatur is warranted. Id.

12 IV. PLAINTIFFS WILL SUFFER IRREPARABLE HARM ABSENT AN INJUNCTION

13 Plaintiffs will be irreparably harmed. See, e.g., California v. Azar, 911 F.3d 558, 581 (9th 14 Cir. 2018); Valle del Sol, 732 F.3d at 1029; see also Mot. 28–32. Defendants’ argument that 15 Plaintiffs fail to show magnitude, certainty, and immediacy, Opp. at 30–32, is inconsistent with 16 Circuit precedent. California, 911 F.3d at 581 (only “irreparability, ‘irrespective of the magnitude 17 of the injury,’” is required (citation omitted)); Boardman v. Pac. Seafood Grp., 822 F.3d 1011, 18 1023 (9th Cir. 2016) (“A threat of irreparable harm is sufficiently immediate to warrant 19 preliminary injunctive relief if the plaintiff ‘is likely to suffer irreparable harm before a decision 20 on the merits can be rendered.’” (citation omitted)). Defendants claim that “record-review 21 briefing could occur in a matter of months.” Opp. 31. But Plaintiffs’ declarations demonstrate not 22 only the likelihood that they will suffer irreparable harm during those months absent an injunction, 23 but also that they already are suffering those harms and require injunctive relief now. See Mot.
 24 28–32. Defendants’ regulatory analysis also demonstrates the magnitude, certainty, and 25 immediacy of Plaintiffs’ harms. See, e.g., RIA at Tables 1, 16, 19.

26 V. PUBLIC INTEREST AND BALANCE OF EQUITIES FAVOR AN INJUNCTION

27 The public interest and balance of equities sharply favors maintaining the status quo 28 because there is substantial public interest in public health, equal application of U.S. immigration

1 law, and government compliance with the law. See California, 911 F.3d at 582–83; Valle del Sol
 2 Inc., 732 F.3d at 1029. Defendants point only to their authority to administer immigration policy 3 as a public interest, Opp. 32–33, but that neither allows the government to violate the law nor 4 outweighs the significant public interests and equities that favor maintaining the status quo while 5 the Court reviews the legality of Defendants’ action. E.g., East Bay, 932 F.3d at 778–79.

6 VI. THE COURT SHOULD GRANT A NATIONWIDE INJUNCTION AND POSTPONE THE EFFECTIVE DATE OF THE REGULATION

7 The Court should grant a nationwide injunction and postpone the effective date of the 8 Regulation. 5 U.S.C. § 705; East Bay Sanctuary Covenant v. Trump, 354 F. Supp. 3d 1094, 1119 9 n.20 (N.D. Cal. 2018).¹⁴ An injunction’s scope is shaped by what is “necessary to provide 10 complete relief to the plaintiffs.” Madsen v. Women’s Health Ctr., Inc., 512 U.S. 753, 765 (1994).
 11 A geographically-limited injunction would not provide complete relief here: Plaintiffs’ patients 12 and clients could still be affected by the Regulation based on their present and potential future 13 locations, and the Regulation’s chilling effects could increase with ensuing confusion over its 14 patchwork application. That in turn would still harm Plaintiffs by frustrating their missions, 15 forcing them to divert their resources, and reducing their funding. Moreover, Plaintiff ACT and 16 FJ are located in New York and Washington, D.C., and directly serve communities and members 17 across the nation. Kassa Decl. ¶ 3; Goldstein Decl. ¶¶ 3, 5. Thus, the “breadth” of a nationwide 18 injunction is “necessary to remedy” all Plaintiffs’ harms in this case. East Bay Sanctuary 19 Covenant v. Barr, 934 F.3d 1026, 1029 (9th Cir. 2019); see also Regents of the Univ. of Cal. v.
 20 Dep’t of Homeland Sec., 279 F. Supp. 3d 1011, 1048 (N.D. Cal. 2018).

21 VII. CONCLUSION

22 For all of the reasons stated above and in Plaintiffs’ motion, the Court should issue a 23 nationwide preliminary injunction and postpone the effective date of the regulation.

 26
 27
 28 ¹⁴ Defendants do not challenge postponing the effective date as a remedy. Opp. 33–34.
